Contents

List of illustrations

1. Introduction 1
   1.1 Research questions 1
   1.2 Anthropological pilgrimage studies 2
   1.3 History of the Mazu cult and the Taiwanese pilgrimage 7
      1.3.1 Legends about the goddess and the formation of the cult 7
      1.3.2 State intervention and the development of the cult 8
      1.3.3 The cult and the pilgrimage in Taiwan 10
         1.3.3.1 The religious meaning of the pilgrimage 10
         1.3.3.2 The change in the pilgrimage and its social meaning 12
   1.4 Structure of the thesis 15

2. Research methods and reflexivity 19
   2.1 Research design and research strategies 19
      2.1.1 Selection and entering the field 19
      2.1.2 Research strategies 20
      2.1.3 Research phases 22
      2.1.4 Methods of data collection 23
         2.1.4.1 Participant observation 23
         2.1.4.2 Interviewing 24
         2.1.4.3 Other related methods and data 25
      2.1.5 Data collection and analysis 26
   2.2 A reflexive account of the research 28

3. The place Baishatun and its ritual landscape 34
   3.1 The place Baishatun: a general overview 34
      3.1.1 Ethnic background 37
      3.1.2 Shifting boundaries of political administration 38
      3.1.3 General conditions for economic activities 39
      3.1.4 Social organisations 42
3.2 The ritual landscape of communal worship in Baishatun

3.2.1 The territorial cults in Baishatun
  3.2.1.1 Shrines for the Place God
  3.2.1.2 Worship of the Gods of Three Worlds and the pinganxi festival
  3.2.1.3 The patron goddess Mazu and her temple

3.2.2 Neighbourhood temples and voluntary religious associations
  3.2.2.1 The Wulong Gong temple
  3.2.2.2 The Tiande Gong Temple
  3.2.2.3 The Wuyun Gong Temple
  3.2.2.4 The Donglong Gong Temple
  3.2.2.5 The Taizi Hui (religious association) and the Mude Gong temple
  3.2.2.6 The Nanwen Gong association at Baishatun

3.3 Discussion: translocal influences through ritual activities in Baishatun

Conclusion: from the local to the translocal

---

4. The Mazu pilgrimage: ritual construction of the territory-bound community

4.1 Preparation for the pilgrimage journey
  4.1.1 Choosing the date for the journey and the announcement 4.1.2 Organizing the pilgrimage
    4.1.2.1 Tasks of the Temple Administrative Committee (TAC)
    4.1.2.2 Tasks of the traditional ritual office system
    4.1.2.3 Tasks of the pilgrimage brigades
    4.1.2.4 Pilgrim registration for the journey
    4.1.2.5 Pilgrim and devotee voluntary services on the journey

4.2 The ritual process of the pilgrimage
  4.2.1 Ritual before the departure
    4.2.1.1 The initiating rite
    4.2.1.2 The rite of appreciating spirit soldiers
    4.2.1.3 Vegetarian diet and taboos before going on the journey
    4.2.1.4 The purification rite for Mazu’s palanquin and Mazu’s image
    4.2.1.5 Ritual of launching Mazu’s palanquin
  4.2.2 Ritual of departure and individual rites on the journey
    4.2.2.1 The departure
    4.2.2.2 Pilgrims’ individual rites and taboos on the journey
4.2.3 Ritual at the destination
   4.2.3.1 Arriving at the destination temple
   4.2.3.2 The worship of the Emperor of Heaven
   4.2.3.3 The ritual of dividing incense
4.2.4 Ritual for returning to Baishatun
   4.2.4.1 Worship and celebration in Tongwan
   4.2.4.2 Changing palanquin and the rite of competing the first incense 4.2.4.3 Pilgrimage parade and return to Neidao and Baishatun
   4.2.4.4 Return to the Gongtian Gong temple
4.2.5 Ritual and celebration after the return
   4.2.5.1 The worship of Emperor of Heaven and the rite of appreciating spirit soldiers
   4.2.5.2 Opera performance and the selection of a new ritual officeholder
   4.2.5.3 The banquet
4.2.6 Ritual for uniting the cult domain and the fulfilment rite
   4.2.6.1 The inspection trip
   4.2.6.2 Rite of sending spirit soldiers to stand guard 4.2.6.3 The fulfilment rite of the pilgrimage
4.3 The extent of the Baishatun Mazu cult and ritual differentiation
   4.3.1 The peripheral areas of the Baishatun Mazu cult 4.3.1.1 The northern village: four hamlets
      4.3.1.2 Three southern villages
   4.3.2. The changes in the Mazu cult domain
      4.3.2.1 The village of Xinpu
      4.3.2.2 The village of Tongwan
   4.3.3 Territorial principle and ritual differentiations
      4.3.3.1 The territorial principle of the Baishatun Mazu cult 4.3.3.2 Ritual differentiation between the central and the peripheral areas
4.4 Discussion
   4.4.1 The Baishatun Mazu cult in the comparative perspective
   4.4.2 Ritual construction of the territory-bound community
Conclusion
5. The transcendent power of the pilgrimage odyssey: an analysis of the palanquin performance and the pilgrim experience of walking

5.1 Conceptual tools: performance, experience, and the meaning of ritual

5.2 The enactment of palanquin performance

5.2.1 The palanquin performance embedded in Baishatun’s ritual custom

5.2.2 The palanquin performance and its protagonists

5.2.3 Carriers and the palanquin performance on journeys in the past

5.3. The first palanquin performance category: the goddess’ palanquin oracle

5.3.1 Three modes of palanquin performance to direct pilgrims on the journey

5.3.1.1 The palanquin performance to choose the path

5.3.1.2 The palanquin performance to take a rest

5.3.1.3 The palanquin performance to end the day’s journey

5.3.2 Negotiating the represented meaning of Mazu’s palanquin oracle

5.3.2.1 The goddess’ palanquin oracle

5.3.2.2 Negotiating the represented meaning of Mazu’s palanquin oracle

5.4 The second palanquin performance category: interpretations and functions

5.4.1 Popular interpretations of the second performance category and the ambiguity of its represented meaning

5.4.2 The function of the second palanquin performance category

5.5 The pilgrim’s physical experience of the journey

5.5.1 Walking as a tradition of the pilgrimage journey

5.5.2 The pilgrim’s physical experience of walking on the journey

5.6 Discussion: the transcendent power of the pilgrimage odyssey

Conclusion

6. Ritual topography and boundary-crossing: an analysis of pilgrimage routes

6.1 The pilgrimage routes

6.1.1 Conventional pilgrimage routes and rest stops

6.1.2 Flexible selection of pilgrimage routes

6.2 Ritual topography and the bonds of the pilgrimage

6.2.1 Ritual topography as the social map of the pilgrimage group

6.2.2 Forging pilgrimage bonds

6.2.2.1 Spreading the pilgrimage reputation through emigrants

6.2.2.2 Mazu’s pilgrimage legends and the increase in devotees

Conclusion
6.2.2.3 Establishing temple relationships through the pilgrimage
6.2.3 Changes in pilgrimage bonds
   6.2.3.1 The reinforcement of the pilgrimage bonds
      6.2.3.1.1 The competition for the devotion in the pilgrimage
      6.2.3.1.2 The influence of other groups in strengthening relations 6.2.3.1.3 The changing relations with the destination
   6.2.3.2 The decline of pilgrimage bonds
      6.2.3.2.1 The predicament caused by believers’ disappointment
      6.2.3.2.2 The predicament caused by unsuccessful temple relations 6.3 A discussion on “ritual implicates others” and boundary-crossing 6.3.1 The Mazu cult as a religious symbol of local identity
   6.3.2 The pilgrimage journey and the spreading of Baishatun’s reputation 6.3.3 Transcending ritual and social boundaries

Conclusion

7.Constructing the Baishatun “community”: pilgrimage and the fields of shared belonging

7.1 Exploring the community: from the territory-bound to fields of shared belonging 7.2 Forging identity with the pilgrimage
   7.2.1 Reshaping the Baishatun pilgrimage “tradition”
   7.2.2 The climax of forging the pilgrimage identity
      7.2.2.1 Wading across the Zhuoshui River in 2001
      7.2.2.2 The impact of the event upon pilgrims and believers
7.3 Constructing the Baishatun “community”
   7.3.1 The territory-bound community in Baishatun
      7.3.1.1 The motivation of place making projects in Baishatun
      7.3.1.2 The work of culture preservation in Baishatun
      7.3.1.3 The Baishatun cultural festival
   7.3.2 The relational and religious community of Baishatun
      7.3.2.1 Emigrants’ home village identity and the relational community 7.3.2.2 The common Mazu belief and the pilgrims’ shared belonging
7.3.3 Toward an imagined Baishatun community
   7.3.3.1 The two pilgrimage films about the journey in 2001
   7.3.3.2 The virtual neighbourhood created by electronic communication
8. The pilgrimage arena: contesting ritual privilege and cultural representation

8.1 Contesting ritual privilege in different ritual constituencies

8.1.1 The contest for the ritual position of Mazu servant

8.1.1.1 Conventional ritual authority versus legal administrative authority

8.1.1.2 The dispute between female Mazu servants and temple committee members

8.1.1.3 Contesting the position of male Mazu servant

8.1.2 Competing for leading rights on the pilgrimage journey

8.1.2.1 The tension between the TAC and the palanquin brigade

8.1.2.2 The internal distinctions of the palanquin brigade

8.1.3 The ritual arena for neighbourhood temple reputation

8.1.3.1 The pilgrimage procession as a ritual arena

8.1.3.2 Rivalry in pilgrimage ritual and on the journey

8.1.4 The competition between pilgrims and believers for personal advantages

8.1.4.1 Struggling for personal advantage on the journey

8.1.4.2 The rivalry for the privilege to worship

8.2 Competing discourses of pilgrimage representation

8.2.1 Depictions of Mazu and the arena for cultural representation

8.2.1.1 Different depictions of the goddess Mazu in Baishatun

8.2.1.2 The arena of cultural representation of the Baishatun Mazu

8.2.2 Competing discourses of pilgrimage representation

8.2.2.1 Different perceptions of two Mazu images in the pilgrimage

8.2.2.2 The dispute over pilgrimage representation and its impact

8.3 Discussion: the arena coexists with the community on the pilgrimage

9. Conclusion

Character list

Bibliography